Overall Objectives: Study how states project power abroad to exert influence in the international system. The project seeks to make research contributions relating to how great power competition between the U.S. and China is redefining the concepts of basing and access, comparing military versus civilian methods of influence, and contrasting views of the U.S. and China abroad. The project will produce a new theory on these topics and test it using quantitative and qualitative methods, including survey experiments. As deliverables, the project will produce a series of peer-reviewed journal articles, general audience articles and blog posts, and publicly available survey data.

Statement of Potential Overlap: This is the project that this application is for.
